Of Interest to Mothers.

There is one subject which always interests the mothers of young children and that is how to treat their coughand colds and ward off a threatened at tack of croup. For this purpose we can recommend Coamberlan's Coug-Remedy. It always proves beneficial. In cases of croup it should be given as soon as the croupy couch appears, so as to prevent the attack. Keep it at hand ready for instant use. Many mothers do so and it saves them much un-easiness. For sale by Whitwell Drog

Every Movement Hurts

When you have rheumatism. Museles are stiff and sore and joints are painful. Hood's Sarsaparilla goes right to the spot in this diease, neutralizes the acidity of the blood and radically cures. Accept no substitute.

All Physicians

Must prescribe some of the in-gredients that are contained in Hood's Sarsaparilla – for all troubles of the blood, stomach, kidneys and liver.

They include sarsaparilla, stillingia, yellow dock, gentian, wild cherry bark, mandrake, dandelion, juniper berries, pipsissewa, etc.

The combination and proportions are our own formula and give power to cure beyond the reach of any other prescrip-tion or substitute. That's why it is wise to get Hood's and only Hood's.

ar, who is attending school at New Market, Ala. The arricle shows the young man to be possessed of more than ordinary attainments.)

The children of Israel in times of old when they were in captivity, sang songs and carols to their native land because it was their home, and they were sad and longed to go back to Jerusalem. The poets of all nations have celebrated in song and verse the land of their captivity, some in a note of sadness, some in lays more joyous, so tonight I may be pardoned if I sing in which moves the world and ties the hearts of men to things and places not less than people, moves me in like manner to write of what to me is the most beautiful spot in all the South Land-Sequachee Valley.

Sequachee is an Indian name and means hog-trough, tho'it need not suggest except to the unrefined and those ignorant of the customs, manners and peculiarities of a once vigorous race, the race of Hiawatha, that the people who formerly lived there were hogs, or that those who now live there are the descendents of such.

Sequachee Valley, like other places is a place where people live, many of whom are poor but some few moderately rich, One occasionally finds there an honest lawyer, tho' in this respect it is much like Madison County, Alabama. We have doctors, preachers, farmers, miners, mechanics, merchants, mountaineers and the annals of the county record the name, I believe, of one honest politician, the tradition now bas it that he was carried to beaven alive. But aside from these possessions, which are common to all places, Sequachee Valley has many things that make it wholly different in its spirit, in its geography and physiology, and its climate from every other place in the whole world.

The valley itself, which on an average, is about three and one half miles in width, lies cradled between Cumberland Mountain and Walden's Ridge, with its feet bathed in the waters of river of the great bend and its head pillowed on the converging cliffs of Cumberland mountain and Walden's Ridge, thus extending northeastward from Bridgeport, Alabama, some fifty or sixty miles to Pikeville, Tennessee, the city at its head and terminus of its only railroad.

Winding its way with gravity at its helm, now swiftly, now placidly from the head to the mouth of the valley, receiving as its tributaries all along the way the clear and limpid waters of hundreds of mountain streams and valley springs, the Sequachee Valley River soon widens and deepens, then loses itself in the Tennessee. Along this river are many old watermills and dams (alleged) at one end and a merry-gowhich remind one of the pictures and round in the other, Whitwell is getpaintings he sees in many homes, and of the lines, "The mill will never grind with the water that has passed."

Here in the warm spring days can be seen men of all professions, and boys and girls from the town, fishing for the gamest trout and bass that ever broke the crest of surging waters and threw a rainbow of sparkling spray into the spring sun.

But its rivers and clear creeks are not its only physical charms. Along its western boundaries and extending its entire length, the Cumberland mountain rises almost precipitantly to the height of some thousand or twelve hun dred feet, forming great bluffs, which are not only of themselves the most beautiful master strokes of the hand of are yearly sought by lovers of the sublime and majestic, by the esthetic and by the artist. In the summer many people of the towns of the valley, and some from the distant places, move to their summer homes on these plateaus which overlook the valley. Early in the morning these cliff-dwellers of summer, rise and before six the husbands are off for the valley on a three-mile walk, while mother, sisters and brothers go to the cliffs to see the valley below. On arriving at the bluff in the clear morning sun, which is just rising, to the northeast and southwest and to orders. the east as far as the Lookout Mountains, which overlook Chattanooga, one can see nothing but a great ocean of snow white fog, undulating as it were, with the bills of the valley. Below this sheet of fog, which completely covers the valley and makes one feel like springing out upon its soft white bosom and sailing along its crest, the distant tinkling of cow bells, the far away songs of the farmer boy on his way to the bottom farm, and the commingling of all the sounds arising from the little hamlet just awakened from its dreams to its daily activities, can be beard. But after some hours the sun dispels the fog and, save for a white line winding in great bends, that extends far east beyond the pale of the valley, behind Walden's Ridge against Lookout Mountain, marking out the course of the Tennessee River, one soon sees below him a lovely valley like a great garden, stretching to the northeast and southwest as far as Bridgeport, Ala. The fields of corn are green, the wheat fields are turning yellow with golden grain, the hay fields look like lawns, and the rivers and creeks seem mere branches st. aling their way along under the foliage which clusters on their

the Tennessee river in a majestic swing, makes a great horse shoe bend, as it comes like a serpent creeping out of the Lookout mountain, from an easterly direction, forming the southwest boundhands us the following article on Sequachee Valley, written by his son Osto to the southward toward Bridger and is lost from sight. Looking to your left the valley stretches far but not so wide until it is lost in the distant haze of the morning fog. In front to the east, Walden Ridge rises as a barrier to the rich fields of corn, wheat and bay, and runs parallel to the mountain on which you stand, thus forming the eastern boundary of the valley of Sequachee.

But again changing the point of view. beginning with Bridgeport, Alabama, one can find nowhere a more thrifty chain of small towns, which, in their innabitants a spirit of great progress along all lines. Within the recent years the vast coal interests in the mountain along the valley has given nearly all the towns mining interests. The whole mountain plateau on the west, which extends for miles back from the bluffs as level as a table-land, is rich in coal fields. The development of these interests and the rapid opening of new mines every year along the mountains, together with the great fertility of our soil, has made Sequachee Valley the most energetic and hustling spot in the South.

This then, friends, is my home, I do not say it merely to be conventional, that it possesses beauty of scenery, richness of soil, wealth of lovely and good people, in excess of all other places on earth, but, indeed, to me, it does possess all these in a measure not to be surpassed by those of any other place in the whole world.
